

SOLIDARITY TO ROSA NERA SQUAT

Rosa Nera is a squat located at Kasteli district, at the old town of Chania, and since 2004 gives life to a previously abandoned building, owned by the Technical University of Crete. Rosa Nera constitutes a self-organized, open, socio-political space, a community of struggle beyond and against capitalist values and state institutions. Technical University of Crete tries to sell to Hotel Management Company Belvedere Ltd the right to use the occupied building for 25 years and methodically orchestrates its evacuation. They want to turn a centre of struggle to another sweatshop of tourist industry, which seeks to conquer every square metre of the city. But they count their chickens before they are hatched...

HANDS OFF THE SQUATS

Squats constitute persistent experiments of communities in which we choose to live together and act collectively against every authority. They reflect our imperative for a world without exploiters, for a classless society, where human relations will not be governed by the principles of competition, but of equality, solidarity and mutual respect. State and municipal authorities, public prosecutors, media, fascists of every kind, owners, entrepreneurs and technocrats, left and right governments target the squats, because they are hostile to their world. While relying on lawfulness and defending property, those who trample on our lives are the enemies of the squats in the name either of "investment acts of salvation" or profit and "jobs for all" rhetoric or under the pretext of "returning occupied spaces to the local community".

FOR A FREE WORLD AGAINST THE WORLD IMPOSED UPON US

Rosa Nera is not alone. We stand in solidarity with our comrades and firmly against the bosses and the state. We struggle for the day that every Rosa Nera will grow and blossom both in summer and winter at the riverbanks and neighbourhoods of the whole world.

Locals, squats, collectives, comrades from the centre and the neighbourhoods of Athens and Piraeus